

Parks and Trails

Welcome to Ramsey's Park and Trail System!

Most residents would agree that trails, parks, and natural open spaces are vital to the quality of life in Ramsey and, in many ways, define our community. Ramsey's park system emerged from the conversion of agricultural land to suburban areas in the 1970s, with small park areas—often just open spaces—dedicated within subdivisions. The first prominent park was created in the early 1980s, largely to meet the demand for playing fields for youth athletics. Loral I Armstrong Delany Central Park was envisioned as a community park and continues to serve this purpose today. It is viewed as Ramsey's flagship park and boasts the largest playground in the City. In the 1990s, trails were added to Ramsey's recreational landscape, and these were just as enthusiastically embraced as parks. Across the City, the value of parks, trails, and open spaces continues to increase, reflecting the growing population and the conversion of open areas to residential developments.

The last few decades can be viewed as laying the foundation for the park and recreation system. In the coming years, the City plans to diversify facilities and recreational programming. New opportunities, such as a splash pad area planned for The Waterfront, and perhaps the addition of a community building with an indoor playground and climbing wall.

Your voice is vital to shaping the future of our parks system. Please let us know what you think by emailing parks@cityoframseymn.gov.
