

LEHI LEDGER

October 2026

MAYOR'S MESSAGE

On Saturday, September 12, I had the privilege of joining nearly 1,000 Lehi residents who came together for the Lehi Day of Service, held in remembrance of the lives lost and the sacrifices made on September 11, 2001.

Twenty-five years after that tragic day, the events of September 11 remain a powerful reminder of the strength, courage and compassion that can emerge when people come together. While we can never forget the tragedy, we can choose how we respond to it. In Lehi, we chose to respond through service.

Throughout the day, hundreds of volunteers gave their time, energy and talents to make a difference in our community. Families, neighbors, businesses, community organizations and individuals of all ages worked side by side. There was no division between us, just people willing to roll up their sleeves and help someone else.

That is what makes service so powerful.

We live in a time when it can sometimes feel like there is more that divides us than unites us. We may disagree about politics, priorities or how things should be done. But service has a remarkable way of putting those differences aside. When we are focused on helping someone else, we discover the things we have in common.

Service builds relationships. It strengthens neighborhoods. It creates friendships and reminds us that we are part of something larger than ourselves.

As mayor, one of the things I love most about Lehi is the willingness of our residents to step forward when their community needs them. Seeing nearly 1,000 people volunteer on a single day was a powerful example of the character of this community.

We honor the memory of September 11 not only by remembering what happened, but by living out the values that brought people together in its aftermath, compassion, courage, sacrifice and service.

Thank you to everyone who volunteered. Your service made Lehi stronger, and more importantly, it reminded us that service is one of the greatest ways a community can come together.

-Mayor Paul Binns
